“Knowing that my children are receiving a wonderful Christian education at MCCS is an invaluable asset to our family. The loving, nurturing, Christian environment makes us feel that our children are not only safe physically, but cared for emotionally and spiritually as well. We so appreciate that Christian values and character are being taught in addition to a traditional education. Yes, it is a financial sacrifice to send your child to MCCS, but it is more than worth it!”

Jody Hilsher, class of 1988, and his family

Reading about the retirement of Mrs. Nancy Morris, I was reminded of the impact MCCS has had in my life. I remember Mrs. Morris as my second grade teacher who made school and learning fun. She is someone who cares about you, and was an excellent example of the people who are a part of MCCS. Whether it is the teachers, administrators, or classmates, it is the relationships that you remember and how people had an impact on your life. I may not remember everything from my classes, the score of a game, or the record of a team, but I can remember each teacher and coach and the impact they had on my life. It is because of the influence of Ken Howard, who was the former athletic director at MCCS, that I was encouraged to pursue the opportunity to work with kids also as an athletic director. Today I am the AD at Calvary Christian School in Covington, Kentucky.

I am grateful to my Mom and Dad for the sacrifices they made to send me to MCCS. The school and church were an extension of our family and the same values were reinforced at school as they were at home.
